STRATEGIES FOR RECOGNIZING AND RESPONDING TO STUDENTS OF CONCERN

Many college students are dealing with issues such as stress, anxiety, depression, disability, homelessness, and other concerns. In the classroom, these issues can surface and lead to behavior problems and/or the inability to succeed. However, with the awareness and concern of the instructor coupled with the appropriate resources, problems can be prevented and success can be possible for these students. In this seminar, faculty will learn to recognize and respond to students of concern. Additionally, information regarding effective communication and helpful resources for students will be discussed by representatives of the Behavioral Intervention Team.
