If any of these questions interest you, you may want to join the Distance Education Faculty Inquiry Team. Despite the growth in distance education, the college is still grappling with some significant structural issues related to ways that distance learning is delivered and supported in order to result in overall course success. Recently, a number of courses were removed from the distance education schedule because of some of these concerns. However, the plans to go forward and develop a robust distance education program will be created through the Distance Education Committee and through the findings of the FIT, which is an inquiry-based collaborative effort of 15 instructors who will convene in the fall 2011 and make recommendations and conclusions about how to improve distance learning at Chaffey College. Each participant would be paid $500 upon completion of the FIT program, which will meet regularly both fall and spring semesters. Participants would be expected to participate in each FIT meeting/activity.
