Peace, Love, & Vietnam: Two Vietnam-Era Veterans Speak

1230-2pm

When Larry Sunderland went undercover as a Green Beret, his parents thought he was in the U. S. Army's marching band. When he returned home from Guatemala and landed at San Francisco Airport after having his jaw broken in combat, no one would serve him a meal and people on the street spat at him. Ron Dixon fought the war from an Army fire base in Vietnam and was very successful at his job. The one event that he couldn't get over was the accidental killing of a child. He suffered from PTSD for many years, but he is finally ready to tell his story. If you have any specific questions you would like these veterans to address, or have any other questions, contact Dr. LaMay at j.lamay@chaffey.edu.

Games Day at the Wig

12-4pm

Playing games can distract us from our hectic lives and can also simulate reality, including war. In The Things They Carried, the simple game of checkers becomes a "ritual" that is "orderly and reassuring" with a "winner and a loser" (31). Come to the Wignall Museum to play chess, board games, and roleplaying games with your classmates, friends, faculty, and staff. Learn about the history of chess, one of the first wargames, and consider the role of games in society.
